SATURDAY EVE, MARCH 31, 1894.

Two men in Chicago, out of work and out of money, Thomas S. Morgan and Edward Court, agreed to commit suicide and both took "Rough on Bets" and both will probably die.

One of the leading candidates for mayor of Green Bay, Wis., can neither read nor write and he is of the opinion that all our financial trouble and the depression in our domestic industries are due to bad Republican legislation.

The president says "The wheels of domestic industry have been slowly set in motion and the tide of foreign investment has again started in our direction. Our recovery being so well under way, nothing should be done to check our convalescence." This gives Senator Hill authority to defeat the infamous Wilson bill, for nothing could be done that would injure the country more than the passage of that measure.

SENATOR PEPPER expresses disgust over the Coxey movement, and yet the Coxey movement is the legitimate product of the heresies that have been taught by demagogues like Peffer and his political progenitors. It men who borrowed money to carry on business or pay for a farm are not morally bound to pay it back in the same kind of dollars he received, then Coxey is the better style of crank.

In his veto message the president says "The financial disturbances which swept over the country during the last year was unparalleled in its severity and disastrous consequences." This is probably not meant to be a calamity now, but there is a good deal of truth in it. The facts are that the depression which the country has suffered is simply commensurate with the mistake the people made at the polls in November 1892.

Reply to Chairman of Voorhees. Some time ago the REPUBLICAN called attention to certain circulars of inquiry sent broadcast over the land by Senator Voorhees which purported to be a plan to gain information to aid the senate committee in perfecting the Wilson tariff bill, but which were in fact a mere sham. They were sent out to make people think they were seeking information, while, as a matter of fact, information was not desired by the committee. If 10 per cent of the circulars had been answered, the committee would not have been able to collate them so as to make the information available.

An intelligent laboring man in this city answered one of the circulars, which was addressed to "Labor Organizations of Workmen." There were nine questions, and the replies he makes will indicate the nature of the questions. He sends to the REPUBLICAN his replies, as follows:

Following are brief answers to questions from chairman finance committee U. S. Senate. I will be very brief and give the situation exactly as it is from a workingman's standpoint.

First I belong to locomotive engineers and railway employees in general. Second I can not give number, but are composed of different nationalities, are a sober and industrious class of people.

Third Wages, hours of employment and production have been greatly curtailed. The cause is depression in business.

Fourth Our industry is certainly in a very depressed condition. Would suggest a return to Republican principles, with the expenditures of workingmen's welfare have been greatly reduced as can be easily demonstrated by a visit to unions housed in our city which the workingmen patronize.

Fifth The wages of the laborers in the past five years have been low enough to last twice bays and half work to exist. With the promise of better things the Democrats were placed in control of the government. Let us see if they have fulfilled their promises. The first four years of the five mentioned were under Republican administration. The last year was under Democratic rule. On the whole, system in the past twelve months all received monthly salaries of over $60 have been reduced 10 per cent from top to bottom. Now, to those working by the day or hour, in the first place, the force has been reduced at least one-third, throwing many men out of employment entirely. Those that are left, and who twelve months ago were working ten hours a day, are now working but eight, and only one day a week, hence the man, who, one year ago, was making $10 a week, is now making but seven, and this is how the present administration has increased the wage rate of the workingmen.

Seventh The tariff is a question that is common laboring man is not expected to know much about. But we cannot help but feel the present depressed condition of all business and all brought about by the threat of a bow that has not yet been cast and, if after the blow has been struck it has as much more of a demoralizing power to it than the threat has had, as we have a right to expect, will have, then we may say "God help us."

Eighth It is not hard work for men to give their views as to the best method of placing our industries upon a prosperous basis after the experience we have had. Under protection we were doing well and were prosperous and happy, as compared to our present condition. The Democratic party promised the laboring men that they would have better wages, cheaper living and that their condition would be better in every way. They did not say it would get worse, but it would get better. They absolutely said it would be better. Is it so certainly not, and there is every indication of it getting even worse.

THE FAMOUS DISCUSSION.

Rev. Geo. F. Hall Comes Back at "Junior" in a Pointed Manner.

"Don't thou fall over to my foes? Thou wretched slave! I left it for shame, and hang a calf's skin on these recreant limbs." SHAKESPEARE (King John).

EDITORS REPUBLICAN: As there was no reply Yesterdays to my article of Wednesday, I had about concluded that "Jonathan Edwards, Jr." was dead. But no! After two days, hard labor he has succeeded in evolving a column of personal abuse which ne'er before was in your last night's issue. I am not surprised. I expected just this, nothing more. It is the usual dodge of those who are driven to sore extremes. Just as I predicted my challenge stands unaccepted, and will remain so for all time to come. Mr. Ingerson loves money; but there is not enough money in the pockets of his friends hereabouts to induce him to meet any representative man in a public discussion in Detroit, or anywhere else. Writing an article for the "North American Review," and meeting face to face a debater of 30 years' experience are two very different things. But if I were in "Junior's" place I would not say much about Ingerson's article in reply to Gladstone. What is it but a bundle of bald assertions, unsupported by a shadow of argument, and utterly unworthy of mention in connection with the "grand old man's" masterly presentation of the Christian faith? Why don't you mention Father Lambart, the New York priest, who "rossed" your pet within an inch of his life? Why not mention Jeremiah Black, one of America's greatest jurists, who challenged Ingerson to a discussion, and received a promise from the latter to meet him, but the promise was never kept? The truth is that Bob has never yet waged a fair, square, manly, face to face discussion on the issues between in Fidelity and Christianity, and probably never will. He has nothing to gain by a debate, but everything to lose. He is too sharp a bird to place himself in a compromising position. A few years ago he met Gen. Lew Wallace on a train, and expounded to him the beauties (?) of disbelief and urged him to investigate Christianity more thoroughly and see for himself that there was nothing in it. The General promised him to investigate. He kept his promise, and the result is seen in Ben-Hur—the greatest uninspired Christ-story of all literature. I did not say Ingerson was knowledgeable. Oh no! He has absorbed a great deal of knowledge during his checkered career. His father was a Calvinistic clergymen, and from him he inherited certain gifts of nature, which, however, he has grossly prostituted in the service of evil. His "gift of gab," and monumental "cheek," have earned him vast sums of money, which he spends selfishly. Where's show-boating, expansion of wind and a flexible conscience are needed, he is at a dead loss; but his big fees are not at all proof of his intellectual greatness. I repeat my former assertions, that he is an ignorant man when it comes to a critical knowledge of the life upon which he seeks so often to throw opprobrium. He never graduated from any school. He does not know a line of either Hebrew or Greek, in which the word of God was originally written. Prof. Braden declares that he never taught but a part of one term of school, not being allowed to finish it by the patrons who were disgruntled with him. He wears a scar on his head to-day that was made by a beer bottle thrown in a saloon from the hand of a woman of ill-fame. He grew rich at Paris through his connection with the whisky ring. He defended D. M. Bennett in the publication of obscene literature. He favored slavery and secession until he saw it was unpopular; then he "flipped," and was rewarded with a colonelcy. In his first engagement he was chased into a hog-pen and surrendered to a boy. All these and sixty-five more distinct charges have been made against him by the man I would secure to meet him in debate, and Ingerson has never yet tried to disprove them. If they are false, he could easily put Prof. Braden in state prison; but they are true, and he knows that the least said the better. And this is the ideal hero of "Jonathan Edwards, Jr." A polluter of young men, a destroyer of homes, an incarnation of ribald jests and vulgar sarcasm. Out upon such presumption! "Junior" would have sneered Ingerson in his absence, because, forsooth, Dr. Thomas, Prof. Swing, and perhaps, Rev. Hezekiah Smith, of Podunk, shot a few skyrockets after him upon his departure from their respective quarters. But pray, what fan would there be in that? We want the man right here, face to face, or in Chicago, or anywhere else, where he will agree to debate six days or more with Clark Braden, John Sweeney, President Duran, or some other representative of the Christian church. That's all we ask, but it's more than will ever be granted. We offered the tabernacle because it would be a good place; but we would not insist in it at all condition. Alexander Campbell met Robt. Owen, the greatest infidel of his day. No other American clergymen would meet him. No signal was Mr. Campbell's victory that Mr. Owen was practically never heard of again. That's why Ingerson will not debate. We are proud of Alexander Campbell, of whom O. S. Fowler said he had the greatest brain in America, save only Daniel Webster; but we do not accept his name, for he was not ordained for us. He never founded a church, and never authorized anybody to wear his name. That's why I say these who persist in applying the epithet "Campbellite" to one of the greatest religious bodies of the world, and the most rapidly increasing church of America, are either ignorant or contemptibly small and mean. The onus of my critics in that matter is decidedly puerile.

But why talk to you? There is no debate in you, and judging from your letter not much of anything else but envy toward myself and the church I represent. I owe the public an apology for condescending to notice your communications at all, but felt called upon to explain my position more fully, after your misrepresentation. Then I also wished to draw you out a little farther, to see what was your real animus, anyhow, and as I surmised at first it seemed to be to create antagonism between myself and my brother pastors, and if possible array all the churches of Detroit against mine. Well, this is a very ugly notion, but it is just like a snake. As for what I have said in my article, I could simply remark that your friends have heard me from the first, and know better what I preached than do reading ignor-

PASSION'S THRALL.

Col. Breckinridge Continues His Tale of Woe.

WOULD HAVE REFORMED IF HE COULD,

But That Wicked Schoolgirl, by Blame-shisms, and Threats, and a Revolver, Led Him Capitive at Her Will.

A Long Story Which, While It Smirches the Partner or His Sin, Does Not Help the Colonel's Case.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 30.—At the morning session of Judge Bradley's court Col. Breckinridge again took the stand and continued a general denial of every material point testified to by Miss Pollard. He denied that he had ever given her a basket belonging to his first wife, gave a different version of the visit to Sarah Gess' assignation house, but no less creditable to himself.

Maj. Butterworth said:

"The plaintiff states she came to Washington at your solicitation. State the facts, please, if you had anything to do with it."

"I did everything that I could do to keep her from going to Washington and prevent an open scandal. This was in the summer of 1887. Soon after this she came to my office to see me. Out of this conversation grew a resumption of our relations which had been dropped for more than twenty months. A little while after she came to me and said she had made up her mind to leave Lexington, because she could get no employment in that place that she was pursued by gossips who told about her relations with Rodes. Every time she got a place she was forced to leave. She also said that she had consulted with Senator Beck about coming to Washington and he had said to her Washington, was the worst place possible for a woman to come to. I protested against her coming. She said that it was absolutely necessary that she should come, and I made an arrangement to meet her that night. She said then that she feared she was pregnant, and there was nothing left for her to go somewhere. There was no doubt about her pregnancy, and I postponed her coming on here.

Col. Breckinridge stated that some months later on Miss Pollard called on him at the capitol and her condition then, she had said, was delicate and he advanced her all the money she needed.

"State whether you ever at any time, stated to the plaintiff or gave her the impression that you would marry her."

"There isn't a scintilla of truth in the matter and there never was a conversation of that kind between the plaintiff and myself. There isn't a shred of truth in it at all. Under no circumstances and at no time or place did the plaintiff ever know from me the possibility of such an occurrence ever happening."

"Did you know she had given birth to a child?"

"I never knew that she had a living child; she never informed me of it, and I never believed a word of it until Dr. Parsons testified on the stand that she had given birth to a child."

Col. Breckinridge acknowledged that he paid the bill brought to him by Dr. Parsons for professional attendance upon Miss Pollard. It was $50, and he paid it. Dr. Parsons brought it to him about a year after the child was born. According to the testimony of Dr. Parsons the child was born February 8, 1888. Miss Pollard did not apply for a position in the government service when she came to Washington, but went to the Catholic academy, where she remained two years and six months, the defendant paying her expenses. During a part of that time the improper relations between them were carried on. Miss Pollard seemed a position in the seed division of the agricultural department, bring his absence from Washington in the campaign of 1890.

"There were no relations between the plaintiff and myself from the month of April 1888 to the month of November 1888," said the defendant.

"There was an interval when there was no manhood, it is between the plaintiff and myself, but during which I paid her expenses. In the fall of 1890 there was an understanding between the plaintiff and myself, so far as she was to leave Washington. When I returned from my campaign service I found that she had changed her mind and I obtained a place in the government."

"Did you do anything to help her get a place?"

"The plaintiff I knew to be a woman of very considerable talent. I felt entangled with her to some extent through my belief in her statement that she had had an unfortunate miscarriage, caused by me, and again another miscarriage, and I did what I could to help her. In the fall of 1890 I told her that I thought we should separate—no good could come out of our wrongful relations, and only scandal, and her destruction, and possibly mine would result, unless she left Washington. That with her temper and her lack of self-control, with her indisposition to do anything except as it seemed to me to gratify herself, the natural result of such relations would be an exposure in which she and I alike would have to suffer. If she would go anywhere, only leave Washington, was what I desired, and I told her I would furnish her with the money that was necessary."

"Everyone of my arrangements to prevent scandal," said Col. Breckinridge, continuing, "was put an end to by her declaration that she would not leave Washington."

"On two occasions she left Washington for a time, and I thought she had gone for good, and when she went away each time it was with the distinct understanding that we should part. But she returned to Washington and could not go away, saying she intended to demand of me the support which I owed her, and that she would remain and make me support her. Some of our interviews were pleasant and while some were decidedly unpleasant. Sometimes I lost my temper and said things a man will say when in the position I was in. I impressed on her that only one thing could result from our relations, and that was open scandal, and that it might be to-morrow, or the following to-morrow, but it would come if we did not part. I tried to break our relations, but could not. I refused to continue them longer, but she still came to me, holding over me the threat of exposure. That was the reason I did not break with her."

Col. Breckinridge denied that Miss Pollard had accompanied him to lecture or had revised the manuscript of his speeches. On one occasion he was going to deliver a lecture in Washington and Miss Pollard and a young man with her wife on the street car. They were going to the lecture, and he went with them. That was the only occasion where they attended lecture together.

Recess was then taken.

Col. Breckinridge told of other conversations with the plaintiff as to arrangements for Miss Pollard to leave Washington, all of which were unsuccessful. Finally Col. Breckinridge came to the time when he went to see Mrs. Blackburn about the stories told by Mrs. Fillette affecting Miss Pollard's character, which, while they did not reflect upon her chastity, referred to her as very imprudent. "I told Mrs. Blackburn," he said, "that she should try to persuade the plaintiff to leave Washington, she was an imprudent girl and it was best for her to go away. Mrs. Blackburn spoke highly of Miss Pollard; how she had made an impression on her and on certain Kentuckians of prominence. I said pleasant things about her and we agreed that she should leave Washington.

Col. Breckinridge said he received while in Kentucky a telegram from the plaintiff asking him to meet her in Cincinnati. He met the plaintiff there, and she told him that she had come to tell him verbally that believing she had not wholly allayed Mrs. Blackburn's suspicions she had told the latter that she and the defendant were engaged. "I said that I would not agree to sanction any such statement and said that she should tell Mrs. Blackburn that there were no such relations existing between us. I would give her a chance to get away, and if she did this I would say nothing to Mrs. Blackburn, and the matter would die out. She agreed. I returned to Washington on March 1."

This is the day on which, according to Mrs. Blackburn's testimony, the defendant told her he was engaged to Miss Pollard.

"State when you next saw her, and what took place?"

"When I returned to Washington on the 31st of March she came to see me at my hotel."

"This was before I had breakfasted. In that conversation I asked her if she would keep her promise to leave the city and break up our relations. I told her that if she would break up the relations I would trust her, and to that extent put myself into her power, and would go to Mrs. Blackburn's with her and would pretend that there was an engagement between us. I said to her: 'You have put me in the attitude where there is no alternative left for me to do in order to avoid a terrible public scandal but to trust you; and if I don't do this I suppose there will be a public attempt by you in the streets to take my life,' and I put myself in her power and went with her to Mrs. Blackburn's."

Judge Wilson interrupted the witness here and wanted to know the purpose of this narrative which apparently had nothing to do with the point at issue.

Maj. Butterworth, replying, said that it was to show that there was no agreement between the defendant and plaintiff to marry.

"Well, whatever this agreement between the two," said Judge Wilson, "you do not claim it was made under coercion."

"It was not that kind of coercion," said Maj. Butterworth, "which threatens the life—it was vastly more powerful than that—it was the duress which threatened the home—the character and which in my opinion is the most powerful emotion of all."

Judge Bradley agreed with Maj. Butterworth and the defendant proceeded detailing his conversation with the plaintiff at the Rizzo house on the morning of his arrival from Kentucky—the morning of March 31, Good Friday. He told her he said that marriage between them was an impossibility; that she would always be poor and he could not have respect for her, therefore, I said, 'I had not seduced her and she had not come to me as a maiden.'

"I finally agreed to go see Mrs. Blackburn with her and endeavor to preserve ourselves from scandal. I said I would go to Mrs. Blackburn and tell her that I was engaged to marry her, if the plaintiff would agree to go away and gradually drop out of Mrs. Blackburn's life and not come into mine again. She agreed I should say it was about April 3 and not March 31, as Mrs. Blackburn said, that I went to see Mrs. Blackburn with the plaintiff."

"I will not give the language but the substance of the conversation with Mrs. Blackburn. I said to her that she had been extremely kind to the plaintiff, and that she need feel no distress over the stories about the plaintiff, for I had offered her the protection of my name and with the protection of my name and Mrs. Blackburn's friendship, no one would pay attention to what Mrs. Fillette had said. Mrs. Blackburn said she was interested in the plaintiff as a young Kentucky girl, and she was glad to know everything had turned out so well."

Finally, the defendant reached that point in his narrative where Miss Pollard had met him at the Hoffman house in New York, two days after his private marriage to Mrs. Wing. He arrived in New York, he said, on April 29, the day of his marriage, and on going to the Hoffman house two days later, May 1, to get his clothes, when he had left there, he found the door between the adjoining room and hisajar. In the next room he saw Mr. Pollard only half dressed, and looking apparently as if she had just wakened.

"She demanded of me somewhat personally," he said, "where I had been for two days. She had been waiting for me since Saturday (April 29). I replied, somewhat more rapidly than I should, perhaps, that it was a concern where I had been. She said she intended to know. In the meantime I had walked back toward my room and as I turned she had a pistol leveled at me, and she was rushing toward me. I pulled the door to and turned the latch, so that it would be impossible for her to get at me with her pistol. She began to rattle at the door and I said to her that I was going to send for the police and put her in the Tombs. She cried I am going to shoot through the door, to which I replied: Shoot away, it will only give them additional justification for putting you in the Tombs." She then said she would not shoot; she wanted to talk with me. I said she could not talk with me with that pistol in her hand. About that time somebody knocked at the opposite door across the passage. It was not in answer to my call, but the rap sounded in her room in such a way that it was impossible to tell that it was not at the door of my room. I repeated then that I was going for the police, and added that if she would put the pistol down at the door and go into her room, I would take the pistol and see what I ought to do. I heard her do it, heard her go back and turn the key in her room. I opened the door, took up the pistol and put it in my pocket just as the boy knocked at the door. I opened the door and as calmly as I could, under the somewhat unusual circumstances I said to the boy to bring me a pitcher of water, and shut the door. I then went to her room and knocked at the door, and we had a talk which resulted in her agreeing to go to No. 7 Thirty-first street. We parted and I left the hotel. I married my kinswoman, the daughter of Mr. Robert Scott of Kentucky, and the widow of Mr. Charles Wing, a young Kentucky gentleman who died abroad, said Col. Breckinridge in acknowledging his secret marriage on April 29, in New York."

A visit to Mrs. Blackburn in New York on a business matter was delayed. Miss Pollard was there. After telling of the business matter, a nose where a ladies' tailor had threatened to sue Mrs. Blackburn for buying him arrested for not delivering a suit she had paid for, Mrs. Blackburn said:

"You came over to New York and Madeline followed you and you were at a hotel together. You and Madeline told me you were engaged, and I want an explanation or I'll wash my hands of the whole matter."

Col. Breckinridge said he received while in Kentucky a telegram from the plaintiff asking him to meet her in Cincinnati. He met the plaintiff there, and she told him that she had come to tell him verbally that believing she had not wholly allayed Mrs. Blackburn's suspicions she had told the latter that she and the defendant were engaged. "I said that I would not agree to sanction any such statement and said that she should tell Mrs. Blackburn that there were no such relations existing between us. I would give her a chance to get away, and if she did this I would say nothing to Mrs. Blackburn, and the matter would die out. She agreed. I returned to Washington on March 1."

This is the day on which, according to Mrs. Blackburn's testimony, the defendant told her he was engaged to Miss Pollard.

"You came over to New York and Madeline followed you and you were at a hotel together. You and Madeline told me you were engaged, and I want an explanation or I'll wash my hands of the whole matter."

Col. Breckinridge said he told Mrs. Blackburn that it was not for him to explain (looking at Miss Pollard) but perhaps he would explain later on in a satisfactory manner that Mrs. Blackburn would not blame him. Mrs. Blackburn said it did not matter whether the explanation was made that day or next, but it had to be made some time or else she would wash her hands of the affair.

Describing what happened after his return to Washington, Col. Breckinridge told of Miss Pollard's call on him at the house of Mrs. Wing, as follows:

"One night she came to a house in Jefferson place where I was with my wife. We were sitting in the dining-room and she rushed in with great excitement, and said: 'Excuse me, Mrs. Wing, but I want to see Mr. Breckinridge on a matter of great importance,' and then turned to me and said, 'I want to see you.' I then turned to my wife and said, 'I think I had better go with her.' We went out on the street. There was not much conversation. She said: 'All right; this is our last day.' Her statement is that I said a word disrespectful of my

LIGHT IS BREAKING.

After the Long Night of Business Depression

THE ROSEATE DAWN AGAIN APPEARS.

The Increase Not in the Nature of a Boom, but Conservative and Substantial, Being Based Upon Safer Methods

NEW YORK March 21.—R. G. Dur & Co suddenly begin to talk, as it did to day, 1915.

The president of course was one who was uncertain with his vote. For some days it has been expected and some speculation perhaps discounted. The more confident nation observed this week is partly due to the belief that no disturbance of the currency will be permitted but other causes help forward improvement slowly but very quite perceptibly. The four month increase. The approach of spring, complete though it is, the arrival of orders to replenish stocks and the acreage of orders if smaller than usual at this season is distinctly far out in favor of a recovery. Except in special cases, it is prices that recover and in this case it has gone down. At the end of the first quarter and March 15, the price of cotton may have been reduced. It still is, but the exceptionally cautious attitude and the slow gain is more evident in this than in its expansion.

All speculative markets are far stronger for a time. Lincoln is up 1% for the week, and is in the lead in progress in various respects. The market is in a state of which reached on Wednesday, April 10, when railroad stocks and 4% for trusts. Transactions were so small that speculative selling was discontinued. But after the week on Thursday realized a sharp fall of 1% cents per share for railroads and 9 cents for trusts, and on Friday prices closed considerably below the week's high.

Railroad earnings in March thus far have been 1% per cent smaller than last year for the month. Earnings are down a little less and other eastern and southwestern roads a little more but the decrease in east bound tonnage from Chicago was 7 per cent for the week and 4 per cent for the past four weeks. It is also encouraging the decrease in expenses of larger roads seems to keep equal pace with decrease in earnings.

Wheat rose briefly with reports due every year about April that great injury had been sustained. Later accounts were better and prices fell closing 2 cents higher for the week. Western receipts for four weeks have been only 682,000 bushels against 1,132,000 last year, and the very small 100,000 receipts for four weeks ago, but 737,248 bushels against 730,000 last year so that the tonnage of the two railroads for the large as a year ago. Pork products have sharply advanced, however, but little. Cotton has advanced in the week's movement more favorable to holders though it may have come into sight in excess of the market crop according to some so-called vestigation.

Industries have, and are, though not so much as in other weeks, making up in the works in operation on the increase in the demand. Where so many are working part time or with reduced force the less favored naturally drop out while the multitude of small industries are better occupied.

Sales of cloth in March were so much larger than last year for the month since January has been wholly in favor of the market in demand. The wool and mohair goods are a shade weaker, it seems. Cotton in women's is still very small but needs of latest clothiers have caused quite an improvement in spring goods. Cottons are also in better demand and print cloths have advanced a tenth.

The leather manufacturer is supported by larger orders, particularly from the south for women's goods with men's goods purchased for immediate delivery of the east and west demand at the west. Shipments from Boston 17.5 per cent less than last year for the first quarter are only 147 per cent less for March. The demand for leather also increased though only in medium or the lower qualities. The leather company has reduced prices of men's and boys' boots 25 cents with a discount of 5 per cent on early orders, hoping thus to get a larger part of the year's work done in the summer.

A surprising decrease is seen in the demand for copper now 9% cents for lake and lead is weaker but London speculation again advances the. The iron and steel manufacturer has increased the working force very little this week and slightly lower prices for pig iron and malleable iron and other products at Pittsburgh and Chicago indicate that the works in operation are fully able to supply the present demand but rates decidedly improve at the west.

Domestic trade continues about 30 per cent less than a year ago. Clearings at New York are 9% per cent less and at other cities 27 per cent less. Foreign trade still improves in excess of 100% for the week, larger and larger and in March 2 per cent, larger than last year but imports were 27 per cent smaller for the week. The market is in a race to the imports of sugar, the decline in customs receipts was greater at 1% per cent for the week and 4% per cent for the month while in last year's equivalent period there was a reduction and payment of April imports for the week less than 1% and at the end of the month less than 10%.

Current still 181,000 tons from the country with 1% per cent increase in imports. Trade with the United States and Canada is in a small decline though it is still 1% per cent less than last year.

The foreign trade in the United States is in a small decline though it is still 1% per cent less than last year.

The trouble with most cough medica-ments is that they spoil the appetite, weaken digestion and create the Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, on the contrary, while it gives immediate relief, assists rather than impairs the assimilative organs.
